

Loblolly Biographies

WALTER BOWIE

Walter earned a MFA in Communication Arts and Design from Virginia Commonwealth University where he concentrated on computer design and video. Working for computer design and video production companies in Richmond and San Francisco, he has been involved in documentaries, marketing videos, photography and computer software projects. He videotaped and edited the documentary "Those were the days: the Golden Age of Waterman". His photography assignments have been many and range from being an official photographer at an American Bar Assoc. conference, to promotional photography for regional bands.

interests/activities

Still Pond Store historic renovation, on-going land record research and gardening

LOTTE BOWIE

Lotte started her career in the New York ad agency Young & Rubicam International, Inc. working in media, account management and in the brand identity and package design subsidiary of the agency. She was selected by Conde Nast Publications to be on the sales and marketing team for the launch of the now famous Vanity Fair magazine. She started her own marketing research company utilizing video interviews in San Francisco. There she met her husband and partner in business, Walter Bowie. Moving east, they formed Loblolly Productions which helps clients "create their story" through consistent branding designs across a range of media.

interests/activities

Masters Swimmer
Competitive Epee Fencer